“Two-Eyed Seeing is seeing from one eye the strengths of Indigenous ways of knowing and with Western ways of knowing from the other.”

The gift of multiple perspectives is exceedingly relevant especially within education, health, and social service sectors. Ethical space is needed to support and enact this principle in knowledge sharing. Ethical space is formed when two different groups with disparate world views are poised to engage each other. Ethical space enables a framework for dialogue and new understandings and knowledge creation.

These relational approaches emphasize that mutually beneficial, inter-cultural, collaborative relationships with mainstream society and the Western sciences can be nurtured and grown, resulting in new understandings put into practice.

Building on dialogue from our conference Resilience & Resurgence: Why Reconciled Spaces Are Essential to Healing, we continue to explore tangible yet transformative ways of embracing Indigenous perspectives within our organizations, programs, and service delivery frameworks. This requires foundational, knowledge-based, and structural shifts in ways of being and doing.

Join our two-day conference and learn from renowned Elders, researchers, and practitioners what it means to create ethical space, integrate Indigenous knowledge into practice, and honour the importance of relationships to shape reality.
